

SPORTS WAGERING EDUCATION AND PROTECTION FOR ATHLETICS

Keep Your Players Eligible

One betting case can cost a program a starter, a season and the NIL money already paid. Keep Your Players Eligible walks every athlete through blocking every way to bet, and your compliance office sees team progress without seeing anyone's details.

The risk is real

Quarterback Brendan Sorsby admitted to at least $90,000 in bets, including 40 on his own team at Indiana. The NCAA ruled him permanently ineligible, and Texas Tech says it won't try to recover the NIL money it paid him.

One talk a year isn't enough

In the NCAA's 2024 survey, 22% of men's athletes said they had bet on sports in the past year. In January 2026, federal prosecutors charged 26 people in a point-shaving scheme involving players from 17 Division I teams.

How it worksEvery licensed sportsbook

Each athlete covers their home state, their school's state and the national program.

The gaps those programs miss

Prediction markets, pick'em and sweepstakes apps, plus phone and bank blocks.

Built into your team rules

Sample code-of-conduct wording for your counsel to approve, also usable in NIL contracts.

Real confirmation, kept private

Athletes show their confirmation to compliance, which records the end date on a sign-off sheet and keeps no copy.

Renews every year

Athletes save their end date and get reminders before it runs out. Your report shows how many end each month.

A course built for athletes

NCAA rules, inside information, harassment from bettors and money, with certificates you can check in bulk.

What compliance sees

How many athletes started and finished the checklist and the course, how many bans end in the next 60 days, and whether each certificate code is real. Recovery tools stay private, and any figure under 10 athletes is hidden.

NCAA rules already bar athletes from betting on any sport with an NCAA championship, pro games included, so this takes away nothing they're allowed to do. No setup can promise an athlete never bets; this one removes the easy ways to do it.
